"Almost a quarter of a century has passed since some of you probably heard me declare (May, 1845,) that 'all legal distinctions between individuals of the same country, founded on any such circumstances as origin and the like, are hostile to the genius of our institutions and incompatible with the true theory of American liberty; that true democracy makes no inplace of nativity, or any other similar circumstances of condition; and that the exclusion of the colored people as a body from the elective franchise is incompatible with true democratic principles.'

"I congratulate you that these principles have been at length made a part of the supreme law of the land. Many, no doubt, would have been glad, as I should have been, if the great work consummated by the ratification of the fifteenth amendment could have been accomplished, through the States, through the amendment of the State constitutions; but the delays and uncertainties prejudicial to every interest inseparable from that mode amendment impair the real rights of any State.
